BURIED MINER IS IN A DENSE FOG STILL HELD FAST IN WALLS OF STONE CHILD'S AWFUL

Comrades Force Opening Into Hicks' Narrow Prison, but Danger of New Cave-In Delays the Work of Rescue.

BAKERSFIELD, Cal., Dec. 21.-When day dawned here to-day the night shift of ten rescuers who have worked incessantly for fifteen days in an endeavor to release L. B. Hicks, the buried miner, from his living tomb in Granite Mountain, signalled to the anxious throng assembled at the mouth of the tunnel that they had reached the imprisoned miner.

They passed to him through a hole made under the tram car beneath which he is pinned, a basin of water, with which he washed his face. Through the opening they spoke words of cheer to Hicks, and much to their astonishment found he was in a happy mood.

From the mouth of the tunnel a gallon of milk was sent to him. He yelled back that it tasted "mighty good," and facetiously inquired if he
